DETAILED ACTION

The Office Action is in response to the 371 of JP05/01540 filed July 28, 2006.
Claims 1-6 are being examined on the merits herein.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

This application currently names joint inventors. In considering patentability of the claims under 35 U.S.C. 103(a), the examiner presumes that the subject matter of the various claims was commonly owned at the time any inventions covered therein were made absent any evidence to the contrary. Applicant is advised of the obligation under 37 CFR 1.56 to point out the inventor and invention dates of each claim that was not commonly owned at the time a later invention was made in order for the examiner to consider the applicability of 35 U.S.C. 103(c) and potential 35 U.S.C. 102(e), (f) or (g) prior art under 35 U.S.C. 103(a).

Claims 1-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Lee et al. (US Patent No. 7,166,641 B2).

Lee teaches a group of novel pharmaceutically acceptable salts, each containing local anesthetic and anti-inflammatory activities. The preferred pharmaceutical acceptable salt in this group is diclofenac salt of lidocaine. Diclofenac is a non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID). Lidocaine is a local anesthetic. Other NSAIDs can be used to replace diclofenac and/or other local anesthetics can be used to replace lidocaine (column 4, lines 15-20). Examples of the NSAID that can be used to replace diclofenac include, but are not limited to, etodolac among others (column 4, lines 32-33).

Lee teaches that the pharmaceutical formulation which comprises the diclofenac salt of lidocaine and a pharmaceutically acceptable carrier is suitable for use in topical treatment, such as in the forms of solution, gel, emugel, cream, ointment, lotion, transdermal patch, or eye drop (column 5, lines 29-35).

Lee teaches the pharmaceutical formulation is particularly suitable for use in treating patients with localized pain, such as muscle pain, joint pain, pain associated with herpes infection, and wound pain, by topically and parenterally treating these patients with an effective amount of the pharmaceutical formulation (column 36-41).

Further Lee teaches that the ratio of NSAID to the local anesthetic lidocaine is 1:1 (claim 1; examples 1-19).

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to have formulated the composition of NSAID with lidocaine as taught by Lee and employed etodolac as the NSAID. One in the art would have been motivated to make this substitution because Lee specifically teaches that the diclofenac may be substituted with other NSAIDs, namely etodolac. Thus it would have been obvious to arrive at Applicant's instant invention of an analgesic consisting of etodolac and a local anesthetic, namely lidocaine, based on the teachings of Lee.

Conclusion

Claims 1-6 are not allowed.
